

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to the technical field of storing gas including methane and hydrogen, in particular to the fuel cell technology. In particular, it relates to a method of using a metallo-organic framework material comprising pores and at least one metal ion and at least one at least bidentate organic compound